A top-down view of a light blue ceramic coffee cup filled with a latte. The coffee has a rich, golden-brown color with intricate white latte art in the center, resembling a stylized leaf or flower. The cup is set against a light, textured background with faint green grid lines and a shadow of a plant branch.

A Foster Son of Orlando Gives Back with Comfort Food

By Samantha Slankard

Share

Twelve years. That's how long California native Doug Miller spent bouncing from home to home, kitchen to kitchen and school to school in the foster care system. Despite growing up in unfamiliar houses with a rotation of cooks in the kitchen, Miller always looked forward to — and appreciated — a home-cooked meal.

Miller, in fact, referred to his foster moms as “chefs” and learned a lot about food (and what not to do with it) through the meals he was served. He might not have had the coolest clothes or the newest kicks, but he was fed. And that was how he received love.

After eventually leaving the system and finding a successful career in sales, he retired at 45 and decided, along with his girlfriend, Amy Eldridge, to enjoy the fruits of his labor in Orlando Florida. But around a year and a half into retirement, Miller realized he had a little more work to do. And that included an overwhelming pull to give back to the community and support kids in the system.

Because food held such a special place in his heart, he decided to open up a restaurant that showcased some of the recipes he was served growing up as well as provided jobs for kids who have been, or currently are, in the foster care system. In 2018, FK (which stands for Foster Kid) Your Diet was born. He knew the name needed to be fun and representative of his overall mission, which is to provide his guests with the kind of meals that made him feel loved and worthy.
